Am I the only one who found the name "markup" suspicious, and wonder what the "meta" (look it up) is about? Yeah - this is the whole reason I think the name should be changed. There are a bunch of plugins, such as "HTML" and "WP", with similar names - and we don't want to have this happen. I know there are coders who are going to make use of it regardless of what name it gets, but I think it's a bad idea to have a markup plugin named something similar to an actual HTML, PHP, etc.. I agree. If you install the standard (well, I guess it's still in beta, so not really standard) markup plugin, then it turns into a block-based CMS, which is not what a markup plugin is supposed to be. "markup" could be an ugly word for the average player to come across, I know (Although that's not the case with aCC and I'm sure is not the case with the guy making the change - it's the type of change that will ultimately end up in the core so anyone will eventually see it and get used to it. And I do get used to bad names because I've been around long enough to see it happen before) I think "markup" is a bit ugly, but it's pretty close to "meta", which is a much better word. I just think we should be consistent and use "meta" in general. A meta plugin is a plugin that allows you to add a title attribute to every page on your site, which allows people to identify what that particular page is and what page it
