The pencil tool is often used for making freehand art. It allows for sketching and drawing within Photoshop without having to touch the canvas or set up a drawing template. Adjustment layers allow you to make adjustments to your entire image. These layers help you separate the image from the background. The Pen tool is used to create drawings and doodles. Gradients allow you to vary the intensity of an image. You can also create animated gradients, and you can use them to create pleasing, natural-looking blends between colors in your image. Lens corrections perform various adjustments that improve the quality of an image. Q: Is this link to GameDev cheating? It is said that a link to GameDev is throwing an Indirect Reference error. I have read the notes at the top: This is the direct link to the GameDev site. However it appears that there is a similar link here, leading to GameDev. Is this link not allowed? Why, if it is not allowed, is it allowing this link, which appears to be the same as the links to SO for instance. A: This is not a link to GameDev, it's a link to Game Development's blog, which happens to be in the same directory as GameDev's home page. If you knew any HTML, you would know that the /blogs/ directory is not displayed unless you are logged in. Instead of complaining about it, just be grateful that the page is so useful in terms of showcasing the blogs that are featured. The present invention relates to an image display device and, more particularly, to an image display device capable of displaying an image (a natural image) by using a liquid crystal panel. An image display device using a liquid crystal panel is widely applied to a portable telephone, a note computer, a television set, and the like. FIG. 11 is a view showing a conventional image display device. A liquid crystal display panel 901 includes a liquid crystal layer 902 having liquid crystal molecules, a backlight 903 on a back surface side of the liquid crystal layer 902, and a frame 904 on a surface side of the liquid crystal layer 902. An image signal is input to the liquid crystal display panel 901 via a VGA input terminal 905. The liquid crystal display panel 901 conducts an alternating current drive and displays a moving image. A control unit 909 includes a

On the evening of July 20, 2014, 14-year-old Quinton Hayes was shot and killed in Kansas City, Missouri. Hayes was targeted, for no apparent reason, while standing outside his home. Hayes was unarmed when he was shot to death, at the hands of police. Police subsequently discovered that he had a pocketknife in his pocket, and the knife was in a sheath attached to his belt. He had also been sucker-punched in the face, during the altercation with police, and suffered a broken nose from the punch. It's hard to imagine that this incident could be spun into a justification for police to shoot an unarmed teenager. This should not be happening to an unarmed teen. This should not be happening to any teenager. The killing of an unarmed teen is a tragedy, a disgrace, and an outrage. This should not be happening. In a way, it's perfectly understandable why police shot and killed a 14-year-old. Most people who hear that story won't have any interest in knowing why it happened, and why we should care. But we need to know. And we need to know what happened. Luckily, we can find out from the police records. That's the subject of this very long and detailed report published last month by the Kansas City Star. The picture, as it emerges, is one of brutality and racism, and police who kill unarmed teenagers and then fail to take responsibility for their actions. It's exactly why we should care about the case. Hayes was shot in the back and killed by a police officer who fired five times. Hayes and his cousin, Myles Golden, had been walking outside and were passing the housing projects where Hayes lived. Police were called to the scene to handle a shoplifting call. Gerald Boyd, the officer who fired the shots, waited for the teens to continue walking away, before starting to follow them. He did not order them to stop. He didn't use his Taser. There were other officers at the scene. At some point, Boyd heard Hayes' cousin say: "OK, we're gonna let him go." As Boyd followed, he saw Hayes turn around and face him. It's unclear whether the teenager saw the officer, or heard the warning from Golden. Hayes did not point his hands at
